A SMALL-PARTY PRINTABLE

Thank-You-Note Tracker

After the party comes the part people quietly worry they'll fumble: the thanks. This is one steady page where every kind deed gets its line — the dish, the early arrival, the gift, the flowers — and every note gets its tick, so nothing blooms in a drawer unsent.

How to use it

1. The night of, or the next quiet morning, list names while they're fresh. Five unhurried minutes; go easy on yourself.
2. The They column is yours to shorthand: brought, helped, hosted-with, sang, gift — one word is a complete memory later.
3. Written and Sent are two separate ticks, on purpose. Notes in a drawer are the party's kindest loose end; this column is where loose ends get caught.
4. Keep each note to one warm sentence. Starter lines are on page 3, and a note this short can't be ruined.
5. Set your own deadline generously — the one you'll actually keep. A thanks said late is still a thanks said; none of the ticks expire.

What's inside

- Page 2 — the tracker: one row per kind deed, written and sent.
- Page 3 — one-sentence openers for the four most common thankings.

> A kind note: for the people you can't reach anymore, a thanks kept in your head is real too. It counts. It always counted.

Print at 100% (“Actual size”), US Letter, portrait. Prints nicely in black & white. Personal use: print as many copies as you like.

Written is written. Sent is the tick that sets hearts at ease.

Openers, If You Want Them

One sentence to start, one of your own to finish — that's a whole note.

They brought a dish

“You carried half the table — the dish didn't survive the first half-hour, and I take that as the highest review there is.”

They helped set up or clean up

“Parties are set up twice as fast and closed down twice as sweet when you're in the room. Thank you for both halves.”

They gave a gift

“You know us well — the gift is already in service, and so is the memory of you bringing it.”

They couldn't make it, but stayed kind about it

“Your note found me mid-celebration and warmed the whole kitchen. Next table, we save your chair ahead of time.”

Remember: thank the host's helpers twice — they're the people who make small parties possible, and they almost never get mentioned in the first sentence.
